

5 Reasons Why Co-working Spaces Thrived During The Pandemic

1. FLEXIBLE LEASING

Co-working spaces offer flexible leasing, which means you can rent an office space by the month or even by the week. Additionally, co-working offices offer workspaces of all sizes, allowing you to rent a desk or an office for a small team of five, instead of an entire office floor, like traditional offices.

2. EFFICIENCY

Co-working offices are fully furnished with office furniture, allowing you to move in whenever you like. Additionally, these workspaces also come with an array of amenities available at the touch of finger, such as printing facilities, high-speed internet and kitchen necessities, allowing you to focus more on your business instead.

3. SENSE OF COMMUNITY

With the pandemic having introduced practices, such as social distancing, a sense of community is lost. However, co-working spaces offer vibrant environments where you can meet with others, network and connect with other forward-thinking entrepreneurs, giving you a sense of community and some social interactions.

4. COST EFFECTIVE

Renting a traditional office can be extremely costly and can make a dent in your pockets. However, opting for a co-working space is very cost effective, as the offices are already fully furnished and an array of amenities, such as printing facilities and kitchen necessities are included in the price. This can allow you to save on overhead costs and stay within budget.

5. HYBRID OFFICE MODEL

The pandemic has changed where and when we work. This suggests that a post-pandemic week may look like a combination of working from home and working from the office, also known as the hybrid office model. Having a co-working space allows for this, as you can choose when to work and where to work, giving you the ultimate workplace freedom and flexibility
